ABSTRACT

The First National Juvenile Online Victimization Study (N-JOV) examines the incidence and characteristics of juvenile online victimization cases, including sexual exploitation and child pornography cases, in the criminal justice system. The specific goals were to: 1) provide sound national estimates of the number of juvenile online victimization cases ending in arrest during a one-year time period (July 1, 2000 through June 30, 2001); 2) define categories and subcategories of juvenile online victimizations and describe case, offender and victim characteristics; and 3) make policy recommendations to increase reporting of these crimes and improve prevention measures and provision of victim services.

First, a national sample of 2,574 state, county, and local law enforcement agencies were surveyed by mail asking if they had made arrests in Internet-related child pornography or sexual exploitation cases. Then, detailed telephone interviews were conducted with investigators who had such cases. A stratified sample of law enforcement agencies was created to get information from agencies that specialized in Internet sex crimes against minors while still allowing every agency in the U.S. to be selected at random for the sample.

Eighty-eight percent of the agencies (n = 2,270) that received mail surveys responded. Seventeen percent of the agencies (n = 383) that responded reported 1,723 arrests. Interviews were conducted on all eligible cases that had identified victims or came from agencies reporting three or fewer cases. When agencies reported four or more cases, a random sample of cases was selected for interviews. A total of 612 unique interviews were completed. Data was weighted to estimate annual numbers of arrests. The procedure took into account sampling procedures and non-response, allowing use of the data to project estimated annual arrest totals with 95% confidence that the accurate number would fall within a specific range.

Law enforcement made an estimated 2,577 arrests during the 12 months starting July 1, 2000, for Internet sex crimes against minors. These Internet sex crimes against minors can be categorized into three mutually exclusive types: 1) Internet crimes against identified victims involving Internet-related sexual assaults and other sex crimes such as the production of child pornography committed against identified victims (39% of arrests); 2) Internet solicitations to undercover law enforcement posing as minors that involved no identified victims (25% of arrests); and 3) the possession, distribution, or trading of Internet child pornography by offenders who did not use the Internet to sexually exploit identified victims or solicit undercover investigators (36% of arrests). Two-thirds (67%) of offenders who committed any of the types of Internet sex crimes against minors possessed child pornography. The vast majority of offenders were non-Hispanic White males older than 25 who were acting alone. Most investigations (79%) involved more than one law enforcement agency.

Purpose of the Study

The National Juvenile Online Victimization (N-JOV) Study was undertaken to get a sense of the scope and types of law-enforcement activity regarding internet sex crimes against minors and to serve as a baseline for monitoring the growth of these crimes and related law-enforcement activities. Because Internet sex crimes against minors are a recent phenomenon, data about them have not been gathered in a national study. The N-JOV Study is the first national research to systematically collect data about the number and characteristics of arrests for Internet sex crimes against minors. The N-JOV Study had the three goals of:

1. Estimating a baseline number of arrests during a one-year period so that the growth of these cases in the criminal-justice system can be measured in the future
2. Providing a statistical portrait of the characteristics of Internet sex crimes against minors and description of how they are handled within the criminal justice system
3. Organizing the variety of cases into a typology useful for tracking and analysis.

Study Design

The study is a complex sample design requiring the use of weights for the analysis. See the Analysis section of this User's Guide for further information.

The study used a two-phase methodology of a mail survey followed by telephone interviews. The data collection strategy was adapted from a similar methodology developed to investigate the incidence and characteristics of stereotypical child abduction cases. See the references listed below for the studies employing this methodology.

An adapted version of the Dillman "Total Design Method" was used for the mail-survey portion of the study, to maximize response-rate. The researchers used first class mail to send surveys, personalized cover letters, and business reply envelopes to the heads of the agencies in the sample. Then, at intervals of between 2 and 4 weeks, reminder postcards were sent, followed by second and third mailings of the survey to the heads of agencies that had not responded. See the reference listed below for information about the Total Design Method.

Sample

The first phase mail survey was sent to a national sample of 2,574 state, county, and local law enforcement agencies asking them if they had made arrests in Internet-related child pornography or sexual-exploitation cases. A stratified sample of law-enforcement agencies was created to get information from agencies that specialized in Internet sex crimes against minors and still allow every agency a chance to be selected in the sample. To do this the agencies were divided into three frames.

Frame one consists of 79 agencies that specialize in investigating Internet sex crimes against minors. These include including 32 state and local agencies comprising 30 federally funded Internet Crimes Against Children (ICAC) regional Task Forces, 43 federally funded ICAC satellites and four federal agencies, two of which ultimately participated. The researchers took a census of this frame, rather than sample.

The second frame is comprised of a random sample of 833 agencies known to have sent staff members to training classes addressing Internet sex crimes against minors drawn from lists provided by training organizations. The sample was selected from among 1668 trained agencies.

The third frame consists of all other local, county, and state law enforcement agencies across the United States, a total of 13,586 agencies. The sample (n=1,666) was drawn using an annually updated database of local, county, and state law enforcement agencies included in the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports files or the Bureau of Justice Statistics' Directory of Law Enforcement Agencies. The agencies in the first and second frames were cross-referenced in the database to avoid duplication.

100% of the first frame agencies, 50% of the second frame, and 12% of the third frame agencies were included in the sample. Decisions about sample construction were based on the number of agencies in the population of each frame, expectations that many of the first and second frame agencies and few of the third frame agencies would have eligible cases to report, and practical considerations such as cost and processing time that limited overall sample size.

Interviews were conducted on all eligible cases that had identified victims or came from agencies reporting three or fewer cases. When agencies reported four or more cases, a random subsample of cases was selected for interviews. To be eligible, cases had to:

- 1) Have victims younger than 18.
- 2) Involve arrests between July 1, 2000, and June 30, 2001.
- 3) Be Internet-related.

Cases were considered to be Internet-related if any of the criteria noted below were met:

1. An offender-victim relationship was initiated online
2. An offender who was a family member or prior acquaintance of a victim used the Internet to communicate with a victim to further a sexual victimization, or otherwise exploit the victim
3. A case involved an Internet-related undercover investigation
4. Child pornography was received or distributed online, or arrangements for receiving or distributing were made online
5. Child pornography was found on a computer, on removable media such as floppy and compact disks, as computer printouts, or in a digital format.

The second phase consisted of follow-up telephone interviews with law enforcement investigators to gather information about case, offender, and victim characteristics. The 2,205 agencies that responded to the mail survey, plus the two federal agencies that participated, reported a total of 1,723 cases involving Internet sex crimes against minors, with 50 first frame specialized agencies (consisting of ICAC Task Forces, ICAC satellites, and federal agencies) reporting 999 cases, 226 second frame trained agencies reporting 545 cases and 109 third frame other agencies reporting 179 cases.

The researchers designed a sampling procedure that took into account the number of cases reported by an agency, so as to not unduly burden respondents in agencies with many cases. If an agency reported between one and three Internet-related cases, follow-up interviews were conducted for every case. Eighty-five percent of the agencies that had cases fell within this group. For agencies that reported more than three cases, interviews were conducted for all cases that involved identified victims (victims who were located and contacted during the investigation), and other cases were sampled. For agencies with between four and fifteen cases, half of the cases that did not have identified victims were randomly selected for follow-up interviews. In agencies that reported more than fifteen cases, cases with no identified victims were divided into two samples, using random selection, and then half of one sample was randomly selected for follow-up interviews. In some agencies, the researchers could not discover which cases had identified victims, so sampling was done from among all cases, using the sampling procedure described above.

Of the 796 eligible cases in the final sample, interviews were completed for 79% (n = 630). Of the 21% that were not completed, 13% involved agencies that did not respond to requests for interviews, 3% involved respondents who refused to be interviewed, and 5% involved duplicate cases or cases that could not be identified. The archived dataset has 612 cases because 18 of the n=630 were identified as duplicates.

Analytic Considerations

Missing data is coded as such on a variable by variable basis within the value labels field:

97 = DK = responder indicated that he or she didn't know

98 = Na/Ref = respondent may have been asked but the response was not ascertainable or respondent refused to answer

99 = Not APP = not applicable, not asked due to skip logic.
Some missing data is coded as system missing.

Because of the two-stage cluster sampling design of this study, the dataset should be analyzed using complex samples survey procedures, which are available in most major statistical analysis software. Analyzing the data without accounting for the cluster design will lead to inaccurate results.

You MUST use survey procedures when analyzing these data. The weight variable is needed to derive appropriate point statistics (means, frequencies, etc.) and the stratum and psu variables are need to compute proper standard errors.

Within SPSS use the complex samples add-on module. The csaplan file for SPSS has been included with the dataset. For SAS, use the survey procedures (e.g., SURVEYFREQ and SURVEYMEANS). Stata users should use the svy commands.

The following three variables from the dataset should be indicated when specifying the survey parameters for your analyses:

FINWT – Each case has an analysis weight to account for the probability of selection to both the mail survey and telephone interview samples. The analysis weights were adjusted for agency non-response, case level non-response, duplication of cases among agencies and for arrests by one federal agency that did not participate in case level interviews.

VARPSU – The primary sampling unit variable was created to account for clustering within each of the three sampling frames.

VARSTRAT – The stratification variable was computed based on the different sampling strategies for each frame.

The contributors used sampling without replacement (WOR) estimation method in their analyses. WOR incorporates the finite population correction factor. In the dataset, the finite population correction factor is provided in variable FPC.

Confidentiality Protection

The contributor has removed all identifiers from the data.

Some data was removed due to its narrative elements, to retain case confidentiality.

Extent of Collection

The collection consists of the NDACAN User's Guide and Codebook; the data file DS_135 in SPSS, Stata, and SAS native formats; the N-JOV weighting plan for SPSS (.csaplan); two instrument files; a methodology report; and a final report.

Extent of Processing

NDACAN produced the User's Guide and Codebook. Modifications were made to some labels in the data file. Two variables were removed. One case was edited to remove details in order to preserve confidentiality.

Data File Notes

Variables typically follow the numbering system of the instrument, Telephone.Interview.pdf. An exception to this rule includes variables f45-f47c2, where the questions follow the federal, state, and local, subcategories rather than the exact question numbering.

Groups of variables will have the same prefix, with different numbered or lettered suffixes. Often these naming conventions indicate multiple choice responses to one interview question are coded in multiple dichotomous variables. At other times, these variables together account for multiple responses to one interview question. For example, in variables, ase30a1f, ase30a2f, ase30a3f where the question is, "Where did they go together", the first response (location) is listed in the first of the variables, and in cases where the respondent provided more than one answer, the others are listed in subsequent variables. Thus, you will need to look across several variables for the full response to the question.

Variables ending in "r" were recoded by the investigators. Those ending in "f" are typically recodes of verbal free-response questions. In some cases, the raw data from which the recode was derived is provided; in other cases it is not part of the archived data set.

See the sample section of this User's Guide for a description of the frame variable.

Many of the variable labels are derivations of the interview question and are quite long. Stata, and some older versions of other software packages, will truncate the text. Full text is available in the codebook.

In many cases when an interview question required a free-response, e.g. "describe" or "specify", the response is recorded in the variables that follow. In some cases, the free-response was not archived and is not provided.

The term "identified victim" means that a victim was located and contacted as part of the investigation. Minors depicted in child pornography are also victims, but many remain unidentified; hence the differentiation between identified and unidentified victims.
